ROMANCE OF A DIRTY FACE.

Fred — was my college chum. We had been together four years, and our friendship was as strong and sincere as it is given to mortals to enjoy. Fred had a sister—more beautiful, he said, than the Venus of Milo, for her limbs were all perfect, and she was intelligent, educated and good. Fred wanted me to get acquainted with her, and marry her. If I could.

The family were spending the season at Long Branch, and it was arranged that Fred and I should meet them there as soon as the vacation commenced. We arrived at the hotel and had just got into our room when tea was announced. The pangs of hunger had seized me as I heard the summons, and I suddenly formed a desperate resolution.

"Fred," said I, "I am going to tea before I dress."

"Better make your first appearance like a Christian—take my advice," said Fred, who was very punctilious as to dress, and all other social proprieties.

"It will take me two hours to dress, and if I go now, I will be through before you arrive in the dining-room with your family," said I.

By this time I had got some of the thickest of the car-dust off my face and rushed to the dining-room, where I was just finishing an awful meal, and was congratulating myself, when I looked up and saw Fred and his magnificent sister sitting down at a distant table but directly facing me. She suddenly looked up, and our eyes met. She was suddenly struck with dread, and turned and spoke to Fred, who looked over toward me and replied:

"I felt that my doom was sealed; for I knew that she had noticed me, and asked Fred who I was. I felt that my face was purple—I knew it was dirty. I tried to look indifferent, but found I could not raise my eyes from my plate. I edged out of the hall in some way—how, I know not—and rushed up stairs, debating in my mind whether to take the next train out of town, or down myself in the bath-tub."

I had not decided the question when Fred came in with:

"What in the name of heaven did you go down to tea looking so like the devil for?"

"What a deeply, darkly, double-dyed, damned dolt you were for telling your sister who I was! I replied, and then sat down on the side of my bed and cursed my stars. I felt somewhat relieved then, and bathed and dressed. Then came an inspiration.

"Fred," said I, "introduce me by some other name to-night. She will not recognize me again. Tell her I am sick—or dead—anything—and give me a chance to wear off the disagreeable impression I have produced."

This was agreed to, and when an opportune moment arrived I was presented under the name of Montague—a college acquaintance," Fred explained. My absence was explained on the ground of indisposition, and I had the satisfaction of hearing Maud (for that was her name) say she was not sorry, for, as she put it, "Fred's particular friend is about the ugliest looking mortal I ever saw."

As time passed on I became more and more romantic, and among other projects determined to give her to understand that I was a little more impetuous than Job's poverty-stricken turkey, but that I sought to win her, if possible, for myself alone.

One morning, as I was sitting by her side in the private parlor of the family, Fred came in and handed her a letter, desiring her to give it her immediate attention. I saw her color come and go. I heard her call to Fred to sit beside her, and I stepped and looked out of the window. I heard her say:

"What presumption?"

"But, my dear Maud," Fred replied, and then the conversation became indistinct and I could only catch here and there a word. But I could hear enough to know that Fred was urging and she was protesting. At last I could hear no more, and finally Fred called to me:

"Montague, give us your advice. Maud wishes it as well as I. We will leave it to you to say what ought to be done. Here she has a letter from my dear old college chum, rich, of good family, handsome. She knows all about his character and antecedents—she knows he is my best friend, and yet she calls his offer of marriage 'impertinence,' and says she will leave it to you to say whether she should answer this letter at all."

"You promise, then, do you—you solemnly promise to marry your brother's friend, Mr. B.—if I say that it is my wish that you do so?" I felt that I had her there. After a pause she looked up into my face, and said:

"I do solemnly promise to do so if it is your wish."

"Then marry him, Maud," said I, solemnly, almost theatrically, "and may you live long and be happy."

She fixed her eyes upon me for an instant, as if doubting her ears, and then, burying her face in her handkerchief, her whole frame shook with emotion.

The foregoing stars are supposed to represent an interval of time. In this case they cover a period of three months, during which time we were married and were on our wedding tour through Europe.

"It is not right, dear," said my wife to me one day, "for married people to have any secrets from each other, is it?"

"No, indeed," I replied, earnestly. "Well, then, I have a dreadful confession to make, dear?"

"Go on," said I, as carelessly as possible.

"I don't like to spoil so fine a romance as ours, but as it is not right to keep secrets from each other, I must tell you that I was never deceived as to your identity when you were first introduced."

"The devil you say?"

"No, dear, I could not be mistaken. I had already learned to look upon you as my future husband, and when I once saw you I could not possibly forget your features so soon."

"You wouldn't have married me, then, if I had been as poor as I represented?"

"No, indeed! Such things are only done in novels. I am a flesh-and-blood woman—with an appetite!"

I was shocked; but so have been many men.

The American Abroad.

We found many American travelers in the hotels. Vulgarly is very amusing when it is French or German, it is part of the day's experience; but when it speaks English one feels a sort of unpleasant responsibility for it. Blood is thicker than water, and the vulgarity of one's own family, even far-away members of it, is certainly depressing. One is not proud of "calling cousins" with the usual traveling specimens of the United States. We came in from looking at the fine old church of St. Benigne in the twilight, when an exceedingly well-dressed lady followed us from the same place. "What did you see?" said her friends. "There were no shops, and I felt so lonesome that I came back," she said, with a twang enough to electrify one. Her neighbor replied by a long dissertation on the relative advantages of gathers and flounces, and it seemed strange to have taken the pains to come 4,000 miles to discuss problems, important, no doubt, but which might quite as well have been followed up at home. In the livres des voyageurs were "observations" for the enlightenment of mankind, such as "Mr. and Mrs. —, from Massachusetts. Pears here very good, the best we have had since reaching Europe," which combined the advantage of a bit at the poor Old World and a trumpet-blast in honor of the New, even if it were only in the matter of pears. Why do such people take the trouble to come? They must be rich, or they could not afford the expense. In the old society such an amount of wealth implied a certain amount of culture, and to travel so far for a certain sprinkling of knowledge and interest in art. But these have neither, and it was evidently very dull work to them and to many others we met. Indeed, the head of this very party, an old man, after his womanhood left him and he was free to behave as he liked, nearly put out his jaw with his fearful yawns, accompanied by more hideous than I ever heard of. Lady Verney in the Contemporary Review.

Hints About Water.

No water that has stood in open vessels during the night should be used for drinking or cooking. By exposure to the air it has lost its "aeration," and has absorbed many of the dust germs floating in the apartment. If convenience requires water to be kept in vessels for several hours before use, it should be covered, unless the vessels are tight. Wherever it is practicable, all distributing reservoirs should be covered. Filtering adds to the purity of water. Drinking water should never be taken from lakes or rivers on a low level. Surface water, or water in lakes, pools, or rivers, which receive the surface wash, should be avoided as much as possible. Do not drink much water at a time. More than two tumblerfuls should not be taken at a meal. Do not drink between meals unless to quench thirst, as excess of water weakens the gastric juice and overworks the kidneys. Excessive potations, whether of water or other fluid, relax the stomach, impair its secretions, and paralyze its movements. By drinking a little at a time, all injury is avoided.

Breaking Off Bad Habits.

To break off bad habits, understand the reason and all the reasons why the habit is injurious. Study the subject until there is no lingering doubt in your mind. Avoid the places, the persons, and the thoughts that lead to the temptation. Frequent the places, associate with the persons, indulge in thoughts, that lead away from the temptation. Keep busy; idleness is the strength of bad habits. Do not give up the struggle when you have broken your resolution once, twice, a thousand times. That only shows how much need there is for you to strive. When you have broken your resolution, just think the matter over, and endeavor to understand why it is you failed, so that you may be on your guard against a recurrence of the same circumstances. Do not think that it is an easy thing that you have undertaken. It is folly to expect to break off a bad habit in a day which may have been gathering for long years.

DEAN SWIFT is responsible for this: "When men grow virtuous in their old age, they are merely making a sacrifice to God of the devil's legacy."

SOCIAL NEWS.

A Wedding and a Double Surprise Out of Decatur.

JAMES PRATHER.

The most brilliant affair of the season was the marriage of Mr. Elliott James and Miss Ada F. Prather at the residence of the bride's parents Thursday evening, January 26th.

The bride was dressed in a beautiful gown of white satin and Spanish lace. After the marriage ceremony was performed, which was short, but appropriate, the dining-room door was opened and the guests—about 75 in number—were invited to partake of a beautiful supper which had been prepared for the happy occasion.

After supper the evening was spent in pleasant conversation. At a late hour the guests departed, leaving the happy pair the wish of a long life of prosperity.

The event was said to be the most pleasant ever witnessed in that vicinity. Miss Ada is as kind and good as she is beautiful, and was not only a general favorite, loved and respected by all who knew her, but was the belle of Forsyth. Mr. and Mrs. James received many beautiful presents.

They will reside on her farm near Casson, and as it was Ada's home in childhood, her friends in that vicinity are anxiously waiting for her return. May success and happiness go with them, is the desire of their many friends.

A FRIEND.

A DOUBLE SURPRISE.

The 61st birthday anniversary of Mrs. Lydia Pharis and the 21st anniversary of the birth of Mr. Charles Bevis, both of Hickory Point Township, occurred on Thursday, Jan. 26th, and the event was appropriately celebrated by a big surprise on both, and the party invited Mrs. Pharis's home, where the festivities were held, and where Mr. Bevis had called to spend the evening with the family. The surprises were Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Butts, Mr. and Mrs. Baum, Mr. and Mrs. Keener, Mrs. Chas. Lehigh and son Roy, Mrs. Burkham, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ferrell, Miss Ella Ford, of Zanesville, O.; Miss Emma Bear, Joseph Barnes, of Wellington, Kan.; Mrs. Mary Wylie, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Pharis, Miss Anna Songer, Decatur; Mrs. Samuel Troutman, Miss Myrtle Nieman, Misses Alice, Nora, Effie and Lulu Pharis, Miss Jessie Spencer, of Decatur; Miss Nellie Ashton, of Cicero; Samuel Pharis, Geo. Cressler, and Thomas and Charlie Davis.

A splendid supper was discussed, and Mr. Pharis and Mrs. Bevis received a number of gifts. Mrs. P. was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, and has lived in Macon county since 1863.

A VALUABLE DOG BELONGED to a gentleman, who intrusted one of his farm servants with the key of the barn, from whence he occasionally brought sacks of flour to the house for the use of the family. One night this man wickedly stole a sack of corn for the use of his own household, little thinking that the dog, which knew him so well, and watched and followed him so quietly, would interfere with his guilty plan. All went smoothly until the thief, leaving his master's premises, turned into the road that led to the village, when the shrewd animal, suspecting that all was not right, seized him by the leg, and without hurting him in the least, held him tightly till the morning. Unable to account for his awkward position, the culprit was obliged to confess his crime.

Vaccination for Pleuro-Pneumonia.

Dr. James Law holds that pleuro-pneumonia, which is not to be understood as a strictly lung disease, is likely to be met successfully by inoculation. The plague, he says, is a local disease, which will develop in any vascular structure of a susceptible animal. The germs inhaled into the lungs prey upon the lungs alone, and if other germs are placed upon the raw surface of the tail they will develop in the tail only, but in both cases the disease affects the system in such a way that the animal will not again have the disease, however much it may be exposed. If the tail is inoculated the severity of the disease will depend greatly upon the depth to which the poison is planted. The exhalation and swelling rarely exceeds the size of a hen's egg. But in the lungs the air passages are closed, preventing a free ingress of oxygen, and it is not uncommon for the mass of exudation to weigh as much as thirty pounds, besides an enormous liquid effusion in the pleural cavity. In Australia inoculation is successfully performed by drawing a worsted thread, smeared in the exudate, through the connective tissue beneath the skin of the tail. This is a deep insertion, but the loose texture of the worsted serves to favor the admission of air and counteract any dangerous change in the virus.

A Wonderful Parlor Seer.

A rather curious fact is told by the Confidential in connection with the recent death in Paris of an American gentleman, who had resided abroad with his family for a long term of years, but who returned to take up his abode in his native land some three years ago. He is said to have gone out of curiosity, to visit the famous clairvoyant Edmond, some time before leaving Europe. Edmond told him that he was about to return to the United States, and that the move would prove the most disastrous step that he had ever taken in his life. "Misfortune will enfold me," said Edmond, "and you will come back to Europe at last."

Shortly after the return of the American to the United States, one of his younger children died, other calamities befell him, his own health gave way, and finally he came back to Paris only to stay there his own days in a very short space of time. It was this same Edmond that was consulted by the ill-fated mother of General Skobloff, shortly before her departure for Russia. He had agreed to her question as to the future, but finally yielded to her positive commands. "Well, madame," he said, "I see you before me covered with blood. Your death will be a violent one." It may be remembered that the unfortunate lady was murdered by her own secretary and executioner very soon after her return to her native land.
